PARKING INSIDER

Chief Executive's Message

What will your organisation look like in 5 years time? What about 10 years? With the "PACE" of innovation accelerating faster than we could have ever imagined, the next 5 to 10 years may well see even more radical technologies, business models and a greater focus on customer experience than we have seen in the past. I am a baby boomer so many of my decisions are based on experience. Today's generation is shedding itself of belongings, ownership and showing us a value system that invests in experiences and services that are transparent and that are "authentic". The way Parking delivers value in 5 years time may be reflected in how we break up the various components of our business and see how they can be interfaced with others. As electric vehicles become more affordable will off street parking facilities become the "service stations" of the future? We will certainly touch on these topics at PACE next week as part of the many plenary sessions on offer so I

Kerbside management in Westminster

When you think of London, you think of Buckingham Palace, Trafalgar Square and the West End amongst others, all iconic destinations in the heart of the City of Westminster. There are over 600,000 vehicle trips into Westminster every day, many of which are servicing businesses, transporting goods and people, or simply visiting for work or pleasure. Read more...

The (r)evolution of public outreach

As parking professionals, engaging the communities we serve in meaningful dialogue about their parking preferences and experiences is an undeniably important part of our work. Many of us have learned the hard way that if decisions are made behind closed doors, our proposed projects, policy recommendations and/or initiatives can quickly fall victim to project-killing resistance from outraged citizens....Read more...

Car park squatters could put 1 in 4 of retailers out of business

A study by Parking Australia, has found 'car park squatters' - who hog private spaces intended for genuine customers - are potentially putting 1 in 4 retailers at risk of going out of business. Almost all (90%) of retailers that provide private parking agree that some motorists are using the facilities for purposes other than doing business. Read more..

Develop custom software or buy it commercial off the shelf?

When it comes to purchasing products for activities such as word processing, spreadsheet or presentation software, it's not difficult to decide whether we should buy a 'packaged off the shelf' product or get one custom developed. The packaged products come with loads of functionality and typically provide more functionality than needed. Read more...
